Today I have a plan to go Kumamoto with Japanese friends. I met them at Fukudaimae Station and then I was picked up by Japanese friend's car. On the way to Kumamoto, I'm enjoyed to see the view out of the window so much. It looks nature and wonderful landscape. I think we spent time around 2 hours from Fukudaimae Station to Kumamoto.

When we arrived Kumamoto, the first stopped is Daikanbo. There is located in Aso National Park. which is an observation point on the highest peak of the northern of Aso. From this point, I can get a view of many mountains of Aso which resembles a sleeping Buddha called Nehanzo as well as the gigantic crater valley and the Kuji Mountains in Oita Prefecture so that it is the best spot in Aso for seeing the view.

After that, we went to Kurokawa Onsen where is one of Japan's most attractive hot spring towns. I didn't take the Onsen with Japanese friends because I have a monthly period. So I can't take the Onsen. While I waiting them, I decided to walking around Kurokawa. There is a tiny town inside mountain. It's quite unique because the whole town is full of onsen and ryokans. There is dominated by natural colors and materials, wooden buildings, earthen walls, stone stairs and a river flowing through. I felt in love this place. I want to come back there again.

On the way to Fukuoka, we felt hungry so much. Then we decided to eat something before go back. I ordered Hamberg set which came with rice, salad and corn soup. It's very yummy! After that, Japanese friends sent me back near my guesthouse area. Today I feel thankful to everyone who made my day.
